Dr. Tina Ho delivers tenacity, precision and a deeply personal sense of care to her work as a facial plastic and reconstructive surgeon at Tina Ho MD Facial Plastic Surgery based in Philadelphia and the Main Line. She is hands-on and never loses sight of the confidence patients place in her when they trust their faces in her.

This Dynamic Woman credits her immigrant parents for making her education possible and proudly embraces her Vietnamese American heritage. Medical mission trips to Nicaragua and Costa Rica during her undergraduate years at the College of William & Mary instilled in her a commitment to service and global health.

Dr. Ho is committed to learning and refining her surgical techniques to achieve the best beautiful, natural results. She also views teaching and sharing her expertise as a way of paying it forward and enjoys mentoring students as well as otolaryngology residents and plastic surgery fellows from Temple University Lewis Katz School of Medicine and Tower Health.

What feels most meaningful to Dr. Ho now is empowering patients through facial rejuvenation transformations that still feel true to who they are. She especially connects with patients who want to look like a more refreshed, refined version of themselves. Dr. Ho feels motherhood has deepened this perspective, enabling her to relate more closely to patients who are parents themselves and to be more present and focused as a facial plastic surgeon.

This year marks the five-year anniversary for her practice, a milestone alongside repeated Best of Style and Leading Health and Beauty Expert honors. As her practice continues to grow, Dr. Ho remains focused on what has always mattered most: helping patients feel like the best version of themselves with expertise, authenticity and compassionate care.
